The Federal Housing Administration (FHA) is a United States government agency created in part by the National Housing Act of 1934. The FHA sets standards for construction and underwriting and insures loans made by banks and other private lenders for home building. What is the Federal Housing Administration? The Federal Housing Administration, generally known as "FHA", provides mortgage insurance on loans made by FHA-approved lenders throughout the United States and its territories. The Office of Housing plays a vital role for the nation's homebuyers, homeowners, renters, and communities through its nationally administered programs. "Reducing the costs of Federal Housing Administration loans could help more people achieve homeownership but may also cause some borrowers who would have sought private loans to seek loans with explicit government backing., Federal Housing Administration.
